

JRA Advanced Training

Instructor : Ray McCall
Co-teacher: Hiroyoshi Tahata

Dr. Rolf said, “It is easier to see the likenesses among people and to work on them in the same way than it is to see their radical individuality and to tailor our work to that distinctiveness.”

The purpose of the Advanced Training is to explore how to develop a client centered series or session based on the principles of intervention and the client’s needs and goals. We will review the internal logic of Dr. Rolf’s ten series and how the goals of the 10 series evoke integration, which is one of the most important aspects of our work. We will review neck work, back work and tracking as ways to evoke integration. We will also explore positional strategies and movement interventions, including core connectivity, to bring about higher levels of change and integration. Along with specific manipulation skills, including increasing our range of contact, we will enhance our ability to be present with ourselves and with our client.

When we are truly present we can perceive what needs to be done. Developing perception is a life-long process that leads to the deliberate and appropriate use of self, precise interventions, and the ability to evaluate and track the effects of our work. The course material will be explored through lectures, practicums and instructor demonstrations.

Practitioners will exchange a supervised series with one another, and with an outside classroom client. Through these activities we will learn to strategize and perform a principle guided series which addresses the structural, functional and integration needs of each practitioner and each client. Also, a portion of the course will include the instructors’ latest interests, innovations and discoveries.

“We must learn how to feel our way into the person and wait for what the body wants to show us, not impose our will on the body.”

-Hokaku Jeffrey Maitland

Instructors : Ray McCall & Hiroyoshi Tahata

Ray McCall first experienced Rolfing in 1975. As an Advanced Instructor in the Rolf Institute he teaches basic classes, advanced classes and workshops in the States and abroad. He is interested in people being who they are and expressing that in the world and how Rolfing facilitates that process. The last several years he has been exploring the energetic taxonomy.

Hiroyoshi Tahata

For over 26 years, Hiro has been practicing Rolfing session. As a Rolf Movement instructor, he enjoys offering the Rolf Movement certification workshop since 2009. He has been developing the Art of Yield with Carol Agneessens. Using the concept of Ma and yielding, he is exploring the energetic taxonomy.

Interpreter : Satomi Furukawa

The class will be taught mainly in English and there'll be an interpreter between Japanese and English.
